

Social Security Number Must Be on Tax Returns

Missing or inaccurate social security numbers on federal tax returns held up more refunds for taxpayers last year than did anything else.

The Internal Revenue Service today said that unless a tax return is properly identified by number it cannot be processed. In some cases the number can be obtained from social security records, but in others the taxpayer has to be contacted. Either way, any refund that may be due the taxpayer is held up until the accurate number can be obtained.

When a joint return is filed, the social security numbers of both husband and wife are required. The wife's number should be listed on joint returns even though her income is less than $800.

To make sure an accurate number is entered on the return, taxpayers are advised to copy their numbers directly from their social security cards. In this way payment can be correctly credited to your account and not someone else's.
